COMMENT OF THE FINAL PROJECT SUPERVISOR:

From the beginning, Daniel demonstrated special interest in knowing the Chilean urban and housing dynamics, and in a short time he managed to understand them satisfactorily, including the related and current public policies.

Through his research, Daniel managed to articulate multiple contingent concepts, associated with the current challenges of housing issues, such as the need for social insertion, the relevance of location, the increasing migration, the opportunities of temporarity and the ambiguous limits of minimum standards, among others, achieving an innovative and highly interesting result.

His project proposal demonstrated the understanding of the intervened building, including its industrial origin and its architectural and heritage values, rethinking it in an innovative way to accommodate temporary housing with a focus on flexibility and collective spaces as key elements to achieve an effective social insertion of the socially marginalized in Santiago de Chile.
