This thesis project can be placed within a context of study, analysis and development of programs for the regeneration of marginal territories, which are places, separated from urban realities, that contain important resources that constitute opportunities for local development. Specifically, the subject of study is the Querio village (Ingria, TO), an abandoned place since the 1960s, which today can represent a redemption for a territory that needs enhancement.

The presented work is not only a design exercise but also aims to define a regeneration process that can represent a model of local and territorial development, based on real needs obtained from a specific process made up of different phases.

At first, the study was undertaken with the aim of knowing places, history, culture and heritage, all components that represent fundamental resources for the development of a territorial identity. Construction is the key word that can summarises the second phase, it means the construction of a network of contacts that allowed us to identify the key for the development of Querio village: the social inclusion through the use of mountains as a rehabilitation scenario capable to generate welfare. The third phase was developed through the knowledge of the themes related to the rehabilitation processes and then reached the last phase which resulted in the definition of an architectural project at different scales aimed at demonstrating that morphologically complex territories can be adapted for the definition of inclusive and therapeutic spaces.
